NORH DAKOTA – CLIMATE

<https://www.britannica.com/place/North-Dakota/Climate>

North Dakota's climate is typical of a continental climate with cold winters and warm-hot summers. The state's location in the Upper Midwest allows it to experience some of the widest variety of weather in the United States, and each of the four seasons has its own distinct characteristics.

Sub-humid continental climate. Annual mean precipitation ranges from 13 inches in the northwest to more than 20 inches in the southeast. Average yearly temperature ranges from 37 degrees F in the northeast to 43 degrees in the south. January, the coldest month, average temperatures range from 2 degrees in the northeast to 17 degrees in the southwest. July, the warmest month, average temperatures range from 67 degrees in the northeast 73 degrees in the south. The all-time high was 121 degrees at Steele on July 6, 1936. The all-time low was -60 degrees at Parshall on February 15, 1936. Being 1,000 miles (1,609 km) from any large body of water (with the exception of Lake Superior), temperatures and precipitation in North Dakota can vary widely. North Dakota is far enough north to experience -60 °F (-51 °C) temperatures and blizzards during the winter months, but far enough south to experience 121 °F (49 °C) temperatures and tornado outbreaks in the summer. The 181°F degree (100 °C) variation between North Dakota's highest and lowest temperature is the 3rd largest variation of any U.S. State, and the largest of any non-mountainous state.
